See the General Terms and Conditions for the Payment Service in question, and on which the Customer and Bank have entered into an agreement.

3. Interest and prices

Interest is credited or debited to the account according to what the Bank generally applies at the time for the type of account in question, unless otherwise agreed in writing. In general, interest is calculated in the following way, unless otherwise agreed in writing:

- For amounts that are deposited in an account, interest is credited or debited the amount from and including the Bank Day after the day of deposit. Exceptions to this general rule exist for transfers within one's own interest and VPC payments, where interest is credited or debited from and including the day of deposit.

- For amounts that are withdrawn from accounts, interest is credited or debited the amount up to and including the day before the withdrawal day.

The interest is calculated on the real number of days divided by the real number of days, which for a whole year results in 365/365, or 366/366.

Prices for the account and for managing services connected to the account are set according to what the Bank generally applies at the time. For information on current prices, see appendix to the General Terms and Conditions, "Company Price List". It is permitted to deduct the charges from the account.

Set-off Rules - only applies to Payment Accounts

Deposits in the account are available for withdrawal the same day and up to the same amount as the deposit.

However, should the withdrawal be larger than the deposit and result in the account being overdrawn, even with respect to the book balance, interest on the deficit is calculated.

4. The Bank's right to refuse payment

The Bank is not obliged to consent to withdrawals from the account, if the Bank deems that a more detailed investigation should be undertaken into the nature of the withdrawal documents or for another specific reason.

5. Payment of overdrawn amounts

If a deficit occurs in the account, the Customer is obliged to cover it immediately. Overdrafts also result in the Customer paying the charge and interest that the Bank generally applies at the time for overdrafts of this type.

6. Account with credit

If the Customer is granted credit on the accounts that are covered by these terms and conditions, the provisions apply that are applied by the Bank at the time, which are set forth in the contract that is then signed between the Customer and the Bank.

7. Changes in the terms and conditions

See the General Terms and Conditions

8. The agreement's duration, cancellation and termination of account, etc.
